Rising food prices, shortages hit area

STROUDSBURG — Rising prices and food shortages have come to the Poconos as a result of President Nixon's Phase 4 controls.

Although prices are sliding gently upward — and only in some area stores — shortages are noticeable in almost all Stroudsburg area meat cases.

Under the Phase 4 economic program, food prices, except for beef, are permitted to rise on a cents-per-unit basis to allow for increased production costs since June.

President Nixon announced the lift of freeze controls (nicknamed Phase 3½) on non-beef food prices July 18 and warned that prices would increase sharply under Phase 4.

In the Stroudsburg area, changes in food prices were not noticeable until this week.

The most striking evidence of Phase 4 in the Poconos are increased meat prices. Pork and poultry prices have jumped considerably while beef is in short supply in almost every market.

"We're only getting 60 per cent of our normal stock this week," said Vic Bena, meat manager at Warehouse Foods on Rte. 611. "And the week after this will be worse. Our suppliers won't promise us anything."

The beef shortage is most telling at the Acme Market in East Stroudsburg. Porterhouse and other high quality steaks are being limited to two per customer.

"We don't want people hoarding them," an Acme salesman said. "It's tough to get beef."

Shoppers, though, say stocking up on meat is out of the question because food budgets are squeezed already.

"If I had the money, I'd stock," said one woman in the Acme Market. "But I just don't have it."

Meat suppliers, according to Jerry Ludwig

Food prices increase 42.7% in Poconos

STROUDSBURG — In a little more than a year, the cost of some foods in the Stroudsburg area has increased 42.7 per cent.

A comparison of a survey of five area supermarkets taken on July 1, 1972, with one taken Tuesday shows sharp increases in the cost of meat, poultry and other groceries.

Hamburger jumped from an average of 73 cents per pound last July to 99 cents per pound. The price of frying chicken, climbed from 47 cents per pound to the present 83 cents.

Eggs, tomatoes, potatoes and milk show similar increases. Bread increased the least, only 11 per cent.

The surveys — one taken by The Record and the other by an independent group — compare the average prices of nine staple items in five supermarkets during Phase 2 and Phase 4.

According to President Nixon's July 18 statement on Phase 4, rising costs of raw farm materials, a meat shortage and increased demand are some of the reasons for extreme food costs.

Under 1972 Phase 2 guidelines, designed to dampen inflation, farm prices increased 18.7 per cent, and processed foods and feed increased 11.6 per cent. The White House had hoped to hold increases at two to three per cent a year.

Convicts revolt, killing one guard, injuring five

LEAVENWORTH, Kan. (UPI) — In the nation's second major prison violence in four days, hardened convicts at the Federal Penitentiary revolted for four hours Tuesday, killing one guard, injuring five others and taking four officers hostage.

The hostages were tied and taken to a 12-foot-square laundry room. Guards herded the 2,200 convicts back into their cells and the prison was quiet before sundown.

A convict count revealed five inmates missing, and they were believed holding the hostages. They said they would release the guards in return for a meeting with newsmen and Warden Loren Daggett, who had been on the job for only 15 days.

The warden said that until the hostages were freed "there is nothing to negotiate." He said the inmates wanted to discuss several unidentified demands.

While the rest of the prisoners were being locked up, an unarmed guard — Wayne Selle of Easton, Kan. — was stabbed to death in Cellblock C, the "segregation" cell for troublesome criminals. Five other guards were attacked by inmates. One suffered a broken jaw.

"There was very definitely a struggle to get control," said Mike Quinlan, executive assistant to the warden. But Quinlan said several inmates had warned guards earlier in the day by written notes that violence was planned.

Mitchell accused of using 1984 'Big Brother' tactics

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Government surveillance of citizens prompts fears of a "Big Brother" society and an "information tyranny that could lock every citizen into his past," a government advisory report said Tuesday.

An appendix to the report charged that John N. Mitchell, when he was attorney general, fostered such practices.

In a 346-page report to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW), the panel recommended restraints on the use of Social Security numbers to identify citizens and restrictions on computer data banks containing information on individuals.

The report, which contained several references to the kind of controlled society which author George Orwell depicted in his book "1984," also called for enactment of a federal code of fair information practice.

"The public fear of a 'Big Brother' system," it said, "in Skylab crew 'better'

HOUSTON (UPI) — Sounding like first-time passengers on an ocean voyage, the Skylab 2 astronauts reported Tuesday a slow recovery from their space sickness as they began orbital research affecting man, fish and spiders.

"Everybody feels pretty good until mealtime comes," said Alan L. Bean, the mission commander.

The first spacewalk of the two-month mission was set back to Saturday by flight controllers to give Bean, Owen K. Garriott and Jack R. Lousma time to bounce back from their four-day siege of stomach troubles.

Bean, a moonwalk veteran, said he and his rookie crewmates began the day showing marked improvement but after several hours became "caught kind of in a squeeze" between eating to keep up their strength or avoiding food to prevent nausea.

"We're getting better, no doubt. Nobody's been sick today but nobody's felt good either. I don't think we want to take an undue effort like an EVA (spacewalk) until everybody starts feeling good."

Ground communicator Richard Truly assured the astronauts the spacewalk would not be definitely set until Bean says the crew is fit.

Leavenworth penitentiary warden Loren Daggett explains prison revolt.

been more serious," Quinlan said. "Many times rumors start that never turn out, but we took appropriate measures and sealed off some areas of the prison."

Officials first believed four inmates were involved in taking the hostages until a head count of inmates who returned to their cells revealed five were missing.

the appendix did not necessarily reflect the opinion of the panel, but he added "here is a paper that deserves to be read."

The appendix said the techniques Mitchell relied upon increase the capability of the government to monitor every citizen's activities and prevent or punish those activities "where it chooses to do so."

"The new criminal justice information network can be used in conjunction with the vast government and private computer dossiers being compiled by credit bureaus, insurance companies, welfare agencies, mental health units and others," it said.

"Cumulatively, these files threaten an information tyranny that could lock each citizen into his past; they signal the end of a uniquely American promise—that the individual can shed past mistakes and entanglements and start out anew."

"To this end," it said, "he greatly expanded federal surveillance of citizens thought to be threats to internal security, justifying his action on the theory that the executive has inherent and discretionary power to protect itself."

Chairman Willis H. Ware said

No mortgage money available

HARRISBURG (UPI) — "The crunch is on."

Those words from a spokesman for the Pennsylvania Banking Department sum up the consensus from all facets of businesses connected with home building, buying and selling in the state.

The spokesman for Banking Secretary Carl K. Dellmuth said Tuesday his office is receiving up to a dozen calls a day from banks, real estate people and individuals.

"There's just no mortgage money under $35,000 available," he said. He was referring to the situation in the past week due to enactment of a law extending the 8 per cent home mortgage interest rate ceiling.

The law affects those homes which cost less than $35,000.

Robert Rosenberger, vice president of the Pennsylvania Savings and Loan League, said savings and loan associations normally make up to 90 per cent of their mortgage loans on such low and moderate income housing.

"Some associations are making loans on properties in excess of $35,000," he said, "but under $35,000 mortgage money is tough to get."

Rosenberger said the few loans made under the extended 8 per cent ceiling require high down payments and stringent terms. The banking secretary's spokesman said the same is true for the few banks making loans.

Rosenberger said a down payment as high as one-third of the home's cost would not be unusual under present conditions.

Spokesmen indicated the money usually available for such loans is flowing out of the state for more lucrative loans.

"We're really caught in a vicious circle," Rosenberger said.

John Bolger, a spokesman for the Pennsylvania Bankers Association, said some banks in rural areas might make loans to established customers, but he felt urban banks were clamping down hard.

Herbert M. Packer Jr., a spokesman for the Pennsylvania Builders Association, said he was asking member builders to document each case in which a prospective buyer could not secure a loan.

Vietnam terrorism increases

SAIGON (UPI) — Combat and terrorism increased in South Vietnam Tuesday as Canada ended its participation with three other nations in supervising the truce.

All Canadian members of the International Commission of Control and Supervision (ICCS), except delegation chief Vernon Turner, left Saigon for home Tuesday morning.

Canada announced earlier it would withdraw from the ICCS effective Aug. 1 because the functions of the truce team of Sept. 15 and March 21 meetings. Ousted White House counsel John W. Dean III earlier testified he discussed a Watergate cover-up with Nixon during those meetings.

Coincidental with the Canadian withdrawal, the South Vietnamese military command reported increased terrorist incidents in which civilians were killed or injured. The command also reported an increased number of cease-fire violations.

Lt. Col. Le Trung Hien, command spokesman, said three civilians were killed and 17 wounded when terrorists lobbed grenades into homes in a hamlet on the central coast. One civilian died and three were wounded in another incident, a shelling 27 miles north of Saigon. And a land mine explosion 40 miles north of Saigon killed three civilians.

Hien said there had been 92 cease-fire violations during the 24-hour period ending noon Tuesday, 18 more than in the previous period.

White House explains why Haldeman heard tapes

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The White House said Tuesday that President Nixon authorized H. R. Haldeman to listen to Nixon's secret tapes on the basis of "who could best assist him in determining the facts of the Watergate matter without jeopardizing the confidentiality of the presidential tapes," Warren replied. "I'm not opening or closing any doors."

Haldeman testified he listened to the March 21 tape in an anteroom of his White House office in mid-April. He was "not sure" whether it was before April 17, when Nixon announced that he had learned on March 21 of "major developments" in the case.

Haldeman testified he listened to the March 21 tape in an anteroom of his White House office in mid-April. He was "not sure" whether it was before April 17, when Nixon announced that he had learned on March 21 of "major developments" in the case.

Haldeman said the tapes confirmed Dean's testimony was inaccurate.

"If this was a court of law this would never have been admitted in evidence," Ervin, chairman of the committee, said. "... I think this is counterfeit evidence. But still I'm going to admit it because it's the best we can get.

"I'm going to have to confess that I'm going to be rather scrupulous in whether I should accept Mr. Haldeman's interpretation."

At the White House, Deputy Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren was asked whether Dean and other aides could get access to the tapes.

"The question of access to ceilings on contributions and spending would be more general.

In its report, the task force said it failed to approve several proposals for federal financing of elections, and that the issue should receive further study.

The Task Force thought that a proposal that entails dramatic changes in the political process and has powerful arguments both for and against should warrant a most careful examination and evaluation."

During consideration of its campaign reform measure, the Senate rejected a proposal by Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., calling for mandatory federal financing of elections.

GOP task force drafts 17 campaign reforms

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A House Republican task force Tuesday recommended a package of 17 campaign reforms but sidestepped the highly controversial issue of federal subsidies for political candidates.

The GOP package would include ceilings on contributions and spending by presidential, Senate and House candidates, create a federal elections commission, shorten political campaigns, and increase penalties.

In many respects, the reforms outlined at a news conference by the House Republican Task Force on Electoral Reform resembled legislation passed 82 to 8 Monday by the Senate, although

Driver asks help with school bus

We hate to write this, but, like it or not, school days are right around the corner. And if a whole month seems too much of a corner for you, take a stroll through local stores and see the back-to-school specials for yourselves.

When school opens, it also means school buses will be back on the road, and you know what that means. Drive carefully. But it also means another look at school buses themselves and the way kids behave on them.

There's quite a bit we'd like to say on that subject, but we'll let an anonymous bus driver do it for us. We don't think we could do it much better. (We're indebted to Clem Heist of Brodheadsville, a bus driver, for this clipping from the AAA newsletter).

An open letter from your school bus driver

Hello — I'd like to introduce myself. I'm your local school bus driver. Yes, I'm the guy who is responsible for your child's life twice a day.

I drive one of those big, yellow, unsafe vehicles we call a bus. You hear so much about them on TV these days. No seat belts, etc. I agree, there are many, many things that should be done to improve the safety of the buses, seat belts included, but I consider it a really good day when I can get 60 to 72 kids to all sit down at one time, let alone be belted in.

About those seats—there is approximately 13 inches seating space allowed for each child. Have you measured some of our students these days?

There are a lot of well-behaved kids traveling our buses to school. But then there is that other guy!!! You know the quote about the apple. Among other types, we have the swearers, the movers, the yellers, the match lighters, the fighters, the pushers, and, oh yes the stop jumpers. They are always at the door at least a mile before their stop. All these types can be dealt with if you parents would stand with us bus drivers. (We know we couldn't pay you to ride with us.)

If little Johnny gets hurt on the bus, it is immediately our fault. It couldn't be that he wouldn't sit down or that he was misbehaving. Johnny never does anything like that!!!!

We have a set of bus rules. They are good, reasonable, rules created for the safety of your children. If all parents would make it clear to their children that they intend to stand completely behind their bus driver in the enforcement of the rules, the buses would be well on the way to becoming safer. If you continue to tell your child no, but do not enforce the no, what results do you produce?

When icy road conditions are present, it becomes even more necessary to abide by these rules.

Would you allow your child to throw papers on the floor, cut seats, write on walls, punch someone just for the sake of punching someone, at home? "How do you stand it?" Well — there is that cute little girl who just lost her first tooth . . . somebody else has an "A" on his paper . . . Susie with a big smile, it's her birthday . . . someone is getting a car . . . look at that senior's beautiful painting . . . Are you coming to hear me sing at the school program?

How do I stand it? I guess I couldn't stand it without those crazy kids. Even missed them on vacation.

So how about it? Will you do your part at home and help me get them safely to and from school?

A rich man spent a lot of money on underwater scuba equipment. He bought the works and tried out all the parts.

While deep underwater, he saw a man who had no equipment. He couldn't understand it. So he took out his special underwater writing set and he wrote a message asking how the man did it without any gear.

The man grabbed the pen and wrote back: "You idiot! I'm drowning!"

Murderer who fears freedom found on San Island, eaten beyond recognition by insects and rats.

Confession

The police department is first-class. They bagged every man who was ever charged with molesting. John Carvalho was in the net. He didn't worry. They had nothing on him. A sergeant said: "John come with me." He was taken to the morgue. A sheet was yanked from a skeleton. Carvalho screamed: "I did it! I did it!" and the ticking started again.

The plea was guilty. The sentence was life. That week, 200 soldiers, all of Japanese descent, did an unusual thing. They signed a sacred scroll: "If one John Edward Carvalho ever escapes from Oahu Prison," it states, "we will get him dead or alive." They have been waiting for him for 14 years.

I sit on the second tier and feel the cold of the steel bars. He walks out of the blue shadows into the hot white sun. His hair looks damp. He disappears on the far side of the courtyard. John Carvalho fears freedom. He carries his prison inside his head . . .

"My new father told them to play outside. He ordered my mother to teach me how to wash and iron clothes. She never buckled him. He beat me and he knew how to do it. Tell me, how does a little kid run away from an island?"

When the ticking gets loud, John Carvalho studies a wall. Any wall. He has been free only 16 of his 44 years so he doesn't understand much about it. He was a lightweight — 12 wins, two losses. He drove a truck. He married a girl. The ticking stopped. She became pregnant. Then the ticking began again.

John walked down the street to a screen door. A girl, 13, stood inside. "Anybody home?" Carvalho said. She shook her head. John went inside. "Don't tell anybody," he said. She wouldn't. He glanced at the screen door. Half the neighborhood children were watching. They caught his glance and ran home. The Honolulu police saved John Carvalho from being beaten to death.

The court gave him five years. He divorced Mrs. Carvalho, but it didn't stop the ticking. When he served his time, John rushed out into the starry night and married the first pretty girl who said yes. She cheated. Carvalho caught her. He smashed her with fighter's fists. Then he sold her to his friends — one at a time.

The ticking started. In July, 1959, he was driving on Kahalakauha at noon. Dead ahead, John Carvalho saw something that would stop the sound. It was a Japanese schoolgirl, 13, with shiny black hair. He stopped. "Hey, wanna ride?" She smiled shyly. "I'm only going a few blocks," Carvalho said. "I'm coming right back."

He swung the door open. She may have thought of her daddy's warnings. Her father, second-generation Japanese, had been a hero among heroes — the 442nd Nisei Regiment of the U.S. Army. "Come on," Carvalho said. "We're holding up traffic."

The car moved along Nimitz Road, then turned half right on an access road to Sand Island. The child may have protested, but John Carvalho drove into a stand of timber and shrubbery along the edge of Keehi Lagoon. He asked the girl to get out to watch the neophyte surfers on small waves. The ticking could wait no longer.

He told me he grabbed her. The kid screamed. John said he panicked. That's a lie. He could have hopped into his car and driven away. Besides, a man in panic cannot do the things Carvalho did that day.

The Honolulu Advertiser published a photo of the girl every day. Over it was the word, "Missing." Carvalho saw them and screamed at blank walls that she wasn't missing, she was dead. Three weeks later, the child was

Civilizational Civil War

The sense is widespread that we are living through a civilization crisis, and not only in America but throughout the West, throughout what used to be known as Christendom, that values are in conflict, irreconcilable conflict, and that the conflict goes to the roots of things.

As might be expected under such circumstances, this collision manifests itself everywhere, from incidents involving obscure individuals to momentous issues being litigated in the highest courts.

Who, for example, and whatever the details turn out to be, is not morally chilled by the sterilization, under the auspices of the federal government, of Mary Alice Relf, age 12, and Minnie Relf, age 14? Black, retarded, bewildered, they seem not to have known what they were doing. But even if they had some dim comprehension, is this the sort of thing we think of as the province of the federal government or its "welfare workers?"

Related to pornography

And though the connection has not to my knowledge been explicitly made, is it not clear that a profound relationship exists between the controversy over pornography and the struggle over abortion?

Obviously, the alignment of forces is pretty much the same on each issue. Opposed to both pornography and abortion we find the more traditional and conservative types. On the other side of the line we find liberals and radicals, the conscious modernizers.

Beyond the tactical identities, however, the issues are profoundly related. Both pornography and abortion rest on the assumption that one may legitimately make another human being entirely the instrument of one's will, a vehicle for convenience, pleasure, the will to power. Both pornography and abortion deliberately strip the other being of all its human attributes: dignity, individual identity, rights, life. And both pornography and abortion do this in the name of what can only be called the imperial ego, the ego that admits no ed and discussed again for many of these problems, but nothing tangible has yet to be done.

From our point of view, there are so many serious problems facing and crippling the county, they overshadow any positive actions taken by the commissioners. The positive actions, in all honesty, have been few. But the unsolved problems have been many.

What are the problems?

Monroe County doesn't have enough legal sanitary landfills to accommodate all of the garbage from the county's 49,000-plus residents;

— There isn't any place in the county where liquid waste haulers can dump the sludge which they pump from septic tanks and cess pools;

— Prisoners in the Monroe County Jail have to be shipped to Northampton County because the jail is overcrowded and now, more prisoners than ever before have to be removed from the jail because the sheriff is having trouble finding qualified men to hire as jail guards and meeting state standards;

— Pleasant Valley Manor is in violation of safety and fire codes which the state is demanding commissioners comply with for the safety of the elderly at the Manor;

— Housing is at such a critical shortage people who want to move into the area are forced to stay away.

All of these problems have been with us for many years and yet they remain as the most critical and now are preventing Monroe County from progressing as it has in the past.

New bombshell: the Calley tapes

WASHINGTON — While the nation awaits the Supreme Court showdown over the White House tapes, we have listened to some secret tapes which may present President Nixon with another excruciating dilemma.

These tapes contain Lt. Calley's lengthy, agonizing psychiatric interviews after he was accused of mass murder at My Lai.

Some psychiatrists have concluded from the interviews that he probably was "legally insane" when he led his company on the shooting spree. Other psychiatrists, while agreeing he had personality problems, found "no evidence of mental disease, defect or derangement."

President Nixon has promised personally to review the Calley case. His final decision will have tremendous emotional impact. People around the world believe Calley was a monster who should be severely punished. But others feel he was a madman whose irrational behavior should not forever stain America's fighting men.

Calley's disgust

Calley looked upon himself as quite normal, except for one "irrational behavior happening." As he recounted the incident to psychiatrists, "I had all the troops in a truck, and there was no warm feeling for the Vietnamese people among the troops and me. I had nothing but disgust. I had just, I won't say highly hostile feelings, to the point where I wanted to wantonly shoot anybody or beat anybody up or anything like that. But I had no respect for them . . .

"The truck came up to the village, at which time I went into the store to get some candles. And there was a bottle of Seagram's Seven there, of which I picked up and walked out — just wanton theft. Of which Mama San ran out — well not the Mama San, she was a young girl — ran out . . . I told the guard, the truck driver to go on.

"I just thought that was an extremely irrational behavior. It seems to me I did pay for the candles . . . I came back and I gave the booze to my troops. And I said, 'Joe, check it out for glass.' I don't think I'd personally drink it. I had no desire in drinking the booze because I was afraid of it because it was on the market.

"They didn't drink it (either) . . . The mps and I gave it back to the girl. It was a matter of why I actually did that, for which I had no excuse."

Anger at the war

Calley went on to describe his frustration over the difficulty of identifying the enemy in Vietnam. He confessed grief over the loss of men, anger at the war and constant fear.

"What is your feeling about why are we fighting in Vietnam?" Calley was asked.

"Well," he replied, "everybody knows we're there to stop communism. What is communism? Today, actually communism is not an animal object. It's a philosophy in the minds of men. So how can you go into an armed conflict and say we're going to save these people from (communism). You've got armed combat troops in there to do a job, troops that were designed to fight a hostile enemy . . . We're not going to change your way of thinking. We're going to take your position and then endanger your way of life."

At My Lai, Calley felt he was merely carrying out orders to shoot everyone remaining in the area because they had been identified as the enemy. He was "hyper" or "psyched up," but he felt he was in full control of his faculties.

Afterward, he was stunned over the murder charges brought against him. "I was pulled into the Adjutant, no, I mean the Attorney General's office," said Calley. "And he said we've got a, we're conducting an investigation about the My Lai problem."

"And I said great. And I was happy. Not because it had entered my mind that I had done anything wrong. I thought somebody finally was going to come and ask me my advice on the war. And I had built up so much trust inside me . . .

Murder charge

"But then in the next breath, he told me 'at which time you will probably be charged with murder. Do you want an attorney?' And I said, 'Gee, I thought you wanted to know something about a combat operation. What do you mean you're going to charge me with murder?' He said, 'Well, we're carrying on an investigation . . . There was something wrong there.'"

"What is it," a psychiatrist asked Calley, "that you have actually been charged with as far as you know today?"

"One hundred and two cases of premeditated murder," he replied.

And against whom?"

"Ortional people of mixed ages and races."

The accusation, he said, "suddenly presented me at this stage in my life with a cross few men have to bear in life. Now, people don't talk about the My Lai massacre, they call it the Calley massacre. All of a sudden, I have now become the personification of evil and horror, and everywhere I go, I must face these attitudes of people . . . It is difficult and hard to understand why it should have happened to me, and I singled out."

To benefit Gocek brothers

500 to join Race for Life

LONG POND — Eight international competition karting drivers from Michigan have indicated they will be running in the two-day benefit Gocek Brothers Go-Kart Race for Life on August 11 and 12 at Pocono International Raceway.

According to Robert Snyder, president of Pocono Karters, Inc., the group putting on the race, this brings to five the number of states represented in the World Karting Association-sanctioned event.

Snyder said approximately 600 forms were sent out this week to drivers across the nation for the two-day race.

He expects a minimum of 500 karts from the United States, Canada and Mexico to register in one or more of the 17 classes of events scheduled at Pocono.

Three classes of karts are expected to compete in the two-hour-long endurance races, the most exciting of which will be the FKE or formula stock karts.

Traveling in speeds in excess of 150 miles per hour, the FKE karts have fiberglass bodies and look like miniature sports cars.

The Enduro karts, an FKE

kart without the body, travels at speeds of 100 miles per hour and is characterized by a driver in a reclining position between two large fuel tanks mounted along the frame of the machine.

The sprint karts, which will have to be geared especially for the 1.8-mile road course at Pocono, look almost identical to the early karts of the 1950's where the driver sits in an upright position. These karts reach speeds of up to 70 miles per hour.

So sophisticated are the new, miniature high-speed competition models that they feature such things as four-wheel disc brakes, mag wheels, tuned exhaust systems and special tires for high speed work.

Fun karts, which originally monopolized the industry, will not be allowed to compete, according to Snyder.

The two-day benefit race is being run for the benefit of the Frank Gocek family of Reeder, whose three sons suffer from acute kidney disease.

Volunteers throughout Monroe County have contributed their services to put on the event to try to raise a total of $20,000 for the family.

N. J. man arraigned for rape

BELVIDERE, N.J. — Oliver Garrison, 32, Newton R. D. 4, N. J., arrested Saturday for allegedly raping a hitchhiker was arraigned in New Jersey District Court Monday.

Garrison appeared before Judge Joseph Weber in Newton, N. J. who set bail at $20,000 on the rape charge.

The defendant also appeared before Judge John C. Stritehoff in Blairstown, N. J. who set bail at $5,000 on kidnapping and assault charges.

Garrison was lodged in the Warren County Jail in Belvidere, N. J. to await a hearing.

State police at Blairstown, N. J. arrested Garrison Saturday at Plymouth Lake, N. J. Police said he allegedly raped a 19-year-old girl from Lake Hopatcong, N. J.

Garrison picked up the girl and her 22-year-old boyfriend Saturday on I-80 in Netcong, N. J., according to police.

Police said when Garrison wanted to get off the Hope exit, the couple objected and said they wanted to get out of the car. Garrison then allegedly pulled the knife on the hitchhikers and drove them to a cabin located in a rural area in Stillwater, Sussex County.

Citizens challenge complex

By LORA SHARPE
Pocono Record Reporter

M.T. BETHEL — The residents of Upper Mt. Bethel Township are banding together to preserve their country way of life by keeping a proposed condominium out.

A 526-unit condominium village in the Williamsburg district was approved July 10 by township supervisors.

Although the apartment complex still must gain approval from county and state agencies, residents have begun their fight by forming a group called Concerned Citizens for Orderly Progress (CCOP).

The group plans to challenge the legality of the supervisors' action and protest further approvals of the complex.

According to John V. Boots of CCOP, the group's position is that "their local government is not responsive to the wishes of the voters in the Bangor Area School District."

Residents of the area are worried that the addition of upwards of 1,000 apartment dwellers would fill the already crowded Bangor schools to bursting.

"I'm concerned about the education of my children," said Mrs. Harold Katzner, whose home will have an excellent view of the apartments when completed. "Right now my son is in a classroom with 35 other children. He can't get a good education with that size class."

Area homeowners are also concerned about their taxes. Educating more children means building more schools. Schools are only built with tax dollars.

"We just don't know what this will do to the value of our property," said Mrs. Fred Gebert, who lives across the street from the condominium site.

Many homeowners have fled from crowded areas to escape high taxes and apartment complexes and feel that the evils of the city are following them to the peaceful countryside.

However, natives of the area are even more vehement in their disapproval of the condominium, claiming that they like things just the way they are.

Nixon's cancer conquest 'fraud'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Nixon's two-year-old crash program to conquer cancer through intensive research was denounced Tuesday by two leading senators as a "fraud on the American people."

Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield and Sen. Warren G. Magnuson, D-Wash., made public a memorandum written by Dr. Frank J. Rauscher Jr., director of the National Cancer Institute, complaining that administration budget cuts would "seriously limit" his agency's efforts to find a cancer cure.

Rauscher wrote the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) last Nov. 30, while the fiscal 1974 budget was being prepared, to protest in vain a $140 million OMB cut in his institute's request for $640 million.

Magnuson, chairman of the Senate appropriations subcommittee on health, said his panel would "do what should be done to put some of these programs back" into the pending health, education and welfare appropriations bill—including restoring $140 million to the administration's scaled-down $500 million request for cancer research.

The $500 million is $8 million more than Congress appropriated for that purpose last year.

"White House rhetoric about conquering cancer is no more than the rhetoric about other domestic programs—it is a fraud on the American people," the senators said in a joint statement.

"Like so many other promises, this one evaporated just two years later," Magnuson added. "It is clear from a reading of Dr. Rauscher's poignant memo to the OMB that far more than $500 million could be effectively used to combat a disease that has killed millions of Americans."

The truck regulation, which would affect most vehicles over 10,000 pounds in weight, would set levels for noise, require certain mufflers and outlaw certain types of noisy tires. The truck proposal, put forward under the Noise Control Act of 1972, will take final effect on October 1, 1974.

The Agency estimated the cost would be from $50 to $200 for each truck, with a total cost to the industry of somewhere between $10 million and $30 million.

David D. Dominick, an assistant EPA administrator, said the actions mark "the first time that the federal government has taken explicit, direct action against noise pollution."

The agency also released a study of aircraft and airport noise which concluded that 16 million Americans are affected. The study contends the problem will continue into the mid-1980s unless the Federal Aviation Administration considers more aggressive action than it has taken so far.

Dominick estimated that the proposed regulation for trucks would affect about 190,000 diesel engine vehicles.

Meat packing firm closes

SOUERTON, Pa. (UPI) — A. F. Moyer and Son beef packers, pointing to the present ceiling on beef prices, closed down its operations Tuesday and laid off its 100 employees.

Company sales manager Ronald Troutman said the firm had not made a decision on when it would re-open.

"I don't know when we will be back to work," he said. "It depends on what the Department of Agriculture does."

"We have a freeze on beef prices until Sept. 12 and there's no way we can buy livestock and operate within these freeze prices."

Another Montgomery County beef packer, T. M. Landis, Inc. has elected to continue operations despite the shortage of beef and livestock.

"We should close down because we're losing money," Art Landis, manager of the plant said.

1,000 National Guardsmen police Oklahoma prisoners

McALESTER, Okla. (UPI) —

About 1,000 National Guard troops circled prisoners in open areas of the fire-gutted Oklahoma State Prison compound Tuesday while prison officials emptied and repaired cellblocks for them.

Two convicts were killed, another died for lack of medical care and at least $20 million in damage occurred during the insurrection that began Friday and ended Sunday. At one point 23 prison employees were hostages, but all were released unharmed.

Matthews said National Guard medics had treated 120 persons for injuries since Friday, and treated 61 persons on Monday.

Ed Hardy, Gov. David Hall's news aide, said prisoners who blame the riot on the governor's policy of no parole for drug pushers are "beating a dead horse."

That kind of conduct is not going to change the governor," he said.

"We're trying to clean this prison out," said Hardy. "We're trying to get the people who don't belong in a maximum security prison out."

Hardy said officials also considered releasing some inmates who have only a little time left to serve. He said only about 150 inmates actively participated in the riot. The remainder spent much time in the yard afraid to reenter the cellblocks.

Judges, professors, lawyers, seek uniform laws in U.S.

By CHARLOTTE MOULTON

HYANNIS, MASS. (UPI) — Some 170 legal draftsmen are meeting here to try to unify state laws on use of marijuana, the right of a newsman to keep his sources secret and a variety of other controversial subjects.

The judges, professors and practicing lawyers were without pay as members of the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws (NCCUSL). They have come from all 50 states, the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico to their 82nd annual meeting.

During the coming months they will work in state legislatures for passage of the uniform laws they have approved.

Under a tentative draft of the marijuana statute, private use of the drug would no longer be an offense.

The "Uniform Reporter's Privilege Act" will focus on whether reporters should have the privilege of withholding information from grand juries, police, trial courts and legislative committees. A committee headed by Prof. John W. Wade of Vanderbilt University Law School has been devoting many hours to the problem.

An early draft would allow a reporter to refuse to testify as to both the source and content of information "obtained within the scope of his professional activities" in proceedings such as grand juries and legislative hearings. But he could not claim the privilege if he had concealed from his source the fact that he is a reporter.

Further, he would have to testify if he were an eyewitness to or participant in an act involving physical violence or property damage.

The draft defined "reporter" as "any journalist, scholar, educator, polemicist or other individual who earns his principal livelihood" obtaining information for the mass media.

The Supreme Court ruled on June 29, 1972, that a reporter has no constitutional right to withhold the identity of his news sources from a grand jury. The decision has generated pressure for state and federal laws on newsmen's behalf so that persons who could provide them with information on criminal activity or governmental wrongdoing will not be afraid to do so.

Other proposals on which the NCCUSL intends to act involve treatment programs for persons dependent on drugs, compensation for the economic loss of crime victims, revision of abortion laws to conform to recently established Supreme Court standards and rules on parent-child relationships.

An NCCUSL committee which drafted a drug abuse law feels state programs should be flexible and emphasize treatment rather than punishment. Under the plan no one could be forced to undergo treatment but there would be inducements for the person to accept it.

For instance, no one could be held against his will in a treatment center for longer than the maximum sentence for the offense charged or 18 months, whichever is less.

The proposed Uniform Crime Victims Reparations Act provides that a state board consider claims of up to $200 a week plus medical expenses for individuals suffering economic loss because of an injury or death sustained in a criminal attack.

The proposed child-parent law establishes ways to deter mine the father and mother of each child born, on the theory that both parents—not just the mother—have responsibilities for it. The law would deal with rules of custody, support, visitation and adoption and would prevent disinheritance of a child by either a parent or a parent's relatives because of illegitimacy.

The convention also plans to adapt new rules of evidence for federal courts to the needs of state courts. The federal rules, fashioned by a committee of the American Bar Association (ABA), were originally designed to become effective July 1 but have been held up in the House of Representatives.

Objections have focused on the easing of restrictions on the kind of evidence that is permitted. One change involves the relationships between husband and wife and doctor and patient and when such confidences may be broken.

Toward the end of the sessions the commissioners will discuss preliminary drafts of criminal rules which will not be finally acted upon until their 1974 meeting.

For many years the NCCUSL met in conjunction with the annual ABA convention but the two groups have recently reached a parting of the ways, since the ABA House of Delegates has been refusing to endorse some of the NCCUSL proposals.

Last summer in San Francisco the House not only declined to approve a wide-ranging NCCUSL "no fault" automobile insurance plan but insisted on a ABA drive for its own more restricted version. Because of this disagreement, the commissioners and the bar association are each pushing their own plan in state legislatures.

Franklin will appear before District Magistrate Eleanor Randolph on charges of burglaries in East Stroudsburg: R.C. Lumber Co. and East Wash Laundromat (both twice), Mesko Glass Co., Courtland Beverage Co. and B. Weber's Car Wash.

The defendant and two 17-year-old youths from East Stroudsburg and a 14-year-old girl from East Stroudsburg were arrested by East Stroudsburg police July 18 in connection with a burglary ring operating in Monroe County.

N.Y. youth drowns in Bushkill

BUSHKILL — A Long Island youth drowned Tuesday in Unity House Lake, Bushkill.

Dayle Sheppard, 18, 134th Street, South Ozone Park, N.Y., was pronounced dead at the scene at 5:10 p.m. by both Unity House's resident physician, Dr. Harry Strieb, and Pike County Coroner Duncan Stroyan.

Sheppard was visiting his uncle Larry Brown, 15 Bronx, N.Y., at Unity House.

Brown and Sheppard went swimming in the deep end of the lake at approximately 3:15 p.m. over Brown's objections. Brown, according to observers, wanted to play baseball.

Sheppard called for Brown's help after about ten minutes in the water. Brown swam to his nephew and tried to bring him in. However, both went under in the 20-30 foot deep water.

Brown then freed himself from Sheppard and swam back to the float where he alerted lifeguards.

Sheppard was not seen again until his body was taken from the lake an hour and a half later.

The Bushkill Fire Department rushed rescue equipment to the scene but Sheppard had already been submerged too long for firemen to be of assistance.

Bushkill called for the Matamoras-Milford-Sparrowbush Rescue Squad's divers to find the body.

The divers arrived at 4:45 p.m. and surfaced the body within ten minutes.

Pocono legislators affirm moth control lab support

"The problem is growing and we lost a lot of acreage during the last eight months while we were fighting over renting and renovating a station to breed these parasitic controls," Musto continued.

"We must get set up for next year as soon as possible this fall and many legislators are determined to have a facility soon."

The state assembly had discussed renting a site in Perry County to breed parasitic insects which would be released by the thousands. Such insects look upon the gypsy moth not as a destructive pest but as a tasty meal.

However State Treasurer Grace Sloan has steadfastly refused to enter into any long-term leases regarding the facility, while other state officials have attacked the proposed for the facility as being too high.

Now a number of legislators are supporting a move to establish the station in a state-owned building at Olmstead Air Force Base near Harrisburg. Estimated renovation costs are being initially pegged at about $300,000.

"I have had assurances as recently as last week from Gov. Shapp's office that the administration will support renovation of the Olmstead building rather than renting another site," said Rep. Russell Kowalyshyn, D-Northampton.

Kowalyshyn said a station must be put in operation as soon as possible in order to be able to produce the hundreds of thousands of insect controls needed to fight the advancing gypsy moth.

State Sen. Robert J. Mellow, D-22nd, chairman of the Senate Environmental Resources Committee, toured the Poconos last week to survey damages and met with Musto Tuesday morning in Scranton to discuss action to be taken when the assembly reconvenes in September.

Tom Comerford, Mellow's administrative aide, told The Record that the Senator was ready to support Democratic efforts to lay the groundwork for establishing a station at the Olmstead Base.

Senator Frederick Hobbs, R-29th, said he had discussed the problem with Cianfrani and Mellow and said they were "receptive to the need for more appropriations."

Map shows traffic routes around and through weekend mall experiment beginning Thursday.

Walk don't drive to a local store

STROUDSBURG — Don't plan on driving to your favorite Main Street store Thursday, Friday or Saturday.

Main Street between Sixth and Eighth Streets will be closed to traffic during business hours on those three days.

Local police, borough officials and representatives from the Stroudsburg Businessmen's Assn. have finalized traffic re-routing plans devised by Victor Rodite of Cabot Associates, planning consultants for the borough.

Rodite says the plan is a simple one, designed to make traffic flow through downtown Stroudsburg in a smooth, simple matter — even though a portion of Main Street is closed.

Traffic coming across Brodheads Creek Bridge from East Stroudsburg will be channeled down Ann Street to Seventh or other connecting streets.

Seventh Street will be open to north-south traffic only. Turns onto Main Street will not be allowed until the mall closes.

Sixth Street will be the same way.

Coming into Stroudsburg from the south, visitors and local residents will find themselves facing a change from the usual route through town. Sarah Street will be the main by-pass for going around town. Parking will not be allowed on Sarah Street to make a wider traffic lane.

Another route is to head down Main until Seventh, turn right and take Rte. 611.

Speaking of Rte. 611, persons coming from the north on that route should follow their usual pattern through town. The same for people coming from the south.

Route 191, the other main artery through Stroudsburg will be affected. Instead of turning onto Main Street at the intersection, persons heading south will use Sarah Street as their bypass.

From the south going north, travelers will turn left onto Ann Street to go around the mall area.

Through traffic will go by its normal route.

"Of course," Rodite said, "the best way to bypass Stroudsburg is to take Interstate 80."

Residents are being encouraged and employees ordered to park in the Stroudsburg High School parking lot and use the free shuttle bus downtown.

The bus will run at regular intervals from the patrolled lot.

Stroudsburg police and Monroe County Sheriff's Department will have 12 men stationed in crucial areas to keep traffic moving.

Also, in event of fire or other emergency, crews from the Stroudsburg Fire Department are being positioned in key areas in the mall vicinity.

ESSC students to 'talk the line'

By GERALD SUTHERLIN
Pocono Record Reporter

EAST STROUDSBURG — A four-year struggle to meet student and faculty demands for improved telephone service has led to the installation of a new centrex phone system at East Stroudsburg State College.

Students across the ESSC campus will be able this fall to dial anyone else on campus or outside the campus, including direct long-distance calls, on the new system — and from their own rooms instead of from a communal pay phone in the dormitory hallway.

ESSC Business Manager S. F. Bossler said the new system was first requested four years ago by students and faculty members who were unhappy with the old PBX-switchboard phone system and dormitory pay phones which virtually sealed off the campus to outside callers after dark.

It appears that only one or two planners will attend the meeting, and most planners agree that they can do nothing more about the problem until they get more facts from the borough engineer.

Planners' secretary Mrs. Alice Baumgardner, who last week called for a "complete moratorium" during a heated debate on how to control future development, said Tuesday the planners and council would probably need more facts before any further action could be taken.

"We (the planners) have to write to our borough engineer, Edward Hess Associates, and find out just what the figures are in gallons that we are talking about when we say our sewage plant is operating at 75 per cent of capacity," Mrs. Baumgardner said.

"We have a lot of new businesses coming into the area and we're not sure whether our sewage plant can handle increased input without expansion until we can get some more facts," said Mrs. Baumgardner.

"I think we would be defaulting on our commitment to the taxpayers as planners if we don't check into this," she added.

Some planners had expressed fears that the continuing development of the borough would overtax the municipal sewage treatment plant, but planner Art Jolley has pointed out that restricting residential development would cut off the desired tax base necessary for paying for possible future sewage plant expansion.

"This is why we recommended to the borough that industrial and commercial, but not residential development be required to submit the sewage information," said Jolley.

Borough Council President Joseph Wallace said he did not know how much discussion of the matter would take place at tonight's council meeting. He said it would depend in large on the nature of the planners report, which council have not seen as yet.

Planners are refraining from using the term moratorium until they see what council does with their pending recommendation.

Firemen's fund audit incomplete

EAST STROUDSBURG — An audit of East Stroudsburg's Firemen's Relief Fund will be complete as soon as insurance premium expenditures are verified. That was the report of Pennsylvania Auditor General Robert P. Casey to Gov. Milton Shapp recently.

The relief fund had a balance of $237,795 on December 31, 1972.

Marshalls Reese of the Buck Hill Falls Co. said the tract is located off Rtes. 196 and 422 near the Tobyhanna State Park.

Phone system will benefit administrators

EAST STROUDSBURG — In addition to benefitting students and faculty at East Stroudsburg State College, the college's new centrex phone system is also a boon to administrators.

ESSC business manager S. F. Bossler said the new phone system, which uses computer switching instead of a manually operated switchboard to provide around-the-clock service, will also serve in administrative needs.

The new system will add four new lines to the existing one which ties the college administration to an administrative network involving all state agencies in Harrisburg, other state colleges and some federal offices in Washington.

The administrative network's access will not be available to student or faculty users, Bossler said.

Administrative personnel will get a complete briefing on how to use the new system from Bell Telephone Co. officials.

"I hope the students appreciate the work going into this project from both the college and the telephone company, because the new system will really benefit them," said Bossler.

Four-a-day briefing sessions with various administrators will occur later this month.

No 'stink' caused by waste strike

By STEVE DRACHLER
Pocono Record Reporter

STROUDSBURG — State, county and local officials Tuesday shrugged off criticism from strike-bound liquid waste haulers, saying lack of a dumping site is the haulers' problem.

The haulers, who empty septic and holding tanks for Monroe County homes and businesses not served by the town municipal sewage treatment systems in the county, have declared strike intentions for next week.

They claim state regulations, county commissioners and unavailability of a processing site has prevented them from finding a place for the sewage.

There are three ways to dispose of sewage in Pennsylvania, according to a Department of Environmental Resources official in Harrisburg.

One, the official said, is to use a municipal treatment facility for the sewage pumped by the haulers.

The second method recommended by Richard Erickson, director of community environmental services for DER, is incineration in an approved facility.

And the third, but least favorable method, Erickson says, is establishing a type of landfill for the untreated wastes.

That has been the recent

What are the people going to do?" Martens said.

"Commissioners of DER will have to find a place, either private or municipal to dispose of sewage."

"It's a bad situation," said the co-owner of Mount Airy Lodge who was cited along with hauler Nauman recently for illegally disposing sewage.

Rosas is charged with pulling a knife on Joseph Zatovich of Easton April 21 at the Delaware River. He is presently free on $5,000 bail.

Canfield dropped an armed robbery charge stemming from a separate incident at the river on the same day.

State police at Stroudsburg said Rosas allegedly attacked Zatovich with a knife after Rosas rammed his pick-up truck three times into a car District Magistrate Gerald Canfield.

Rosas is charged with pulling a knife on Joseph Zatovich of Easton April 21 at the Delaware River. He is presently free on $5,000 bail.

During the confrontation, according to police Zatovich's 58-year-old wife, Rose, suffered a heart attack and was taken to the General Hospital of Monroe County where she was treated and released.

The dropped charge concerns allegations by police that Rosas assaulted a New Jersey couple who were fishing on the Delaware River.

Police said Rosas emptied the woman's pocketbook and tried to take their car. They said the couple, Mr. and Mrs. David Barnett of Long Beach, N. J., were able to drive away. Rosas allegedly hurled a rock at the auto, police reported.

practice of haulers — illegally dumping sludge from tank trucks onto rural farm land. One hauler, Barry Nauman of Mount Pocono, was caught and could be fined up to $311.

Haulers say they are through dumping illegally and will not work until someone finds them a way to dump their truckloads of waste within the county.

To take the sewage to distant points outside the county would mean a rate hike of almost 100 per cent, hauler spokesman William Halterman says.

He said Tuesday if he had to take a load of waste to Allentown for disposal and treatment, the cost would reach $100 from the present level of $50-60.

Monroe County Commissioners' Chairman Mrs. Nancy Shukaitis said she sympathizes with the haulers, but thinks they could find a place in the county if they really tried.

There is one place that could take the sewage — and does from one hauler within the county.

Stroudsburg Borough manager Harold Snyder said the borough's municipal plant could handle the wastes but won't.

"We have only one man we'll let in here to dump his sewage," Snyder said.

"And he's the only one."

"We have him trained to know exactly what he can and can't dump through our plant," Snyder said. "It's a matter of self preservation. We know this man and if we would allow everyone to come in, they might dump stuff the state won't allow. If we discharge the wrong stuff into McMichael Creek then we are in trouble," he said.

There is nowhere else locally to process or incinerate the sewage, Halterman said. Facilities in East Stroudsburg, Bangor and Wind Gap have been applied to with negative results.

Monroe County General Authority member Herman Martens blasted local officials and DER for the problem.

"What are the people going to do?" Martens said.

"Commissioners of DER will have to find a place, either private or municipal to dispose of sewage."

Mounties get new assistant

By CHUCK FIERSON
Record Sports EditorBILL STOUT, a graduate of Wilson High School, has been named assistant football coach at Stroudsburg High School, replacing WAYNE HULSIZER, who resigned last year.

Stout, 31, graduated from Wilson in 1960. He played football, basketball and baseball there. He played the same sports at Muhlenberg, from where he graduated in 1964.

In 1967 and 1968 Stout was an assistant football coach at Easton High School. In 1969 he was the varsity line coach at Allen when the school won the "Big Five" championship. Since then he has been line coach at Penn Highlands in Lewistown. Stout will teach junior high school social studies . . .

Speaking of Stroudsburg football, Western Connecticut State College announced Tuesday BOB EDEN, an all-Lehigh Valley League defensive tackle has signed a letter of intent to play football next season.

The 5-11, 240-pounder started for two years at Stroudsburg and lettered for three years . . .

For the first time since 1968, East Stroudsburg State College will host West Chester in football on a Friday night. The teams will meet Sept. 28 at Stroudsburg High School stadium.

The reason for the Friday night date, according to JOHN R. EILER, ESSC athletic director, is so that the game, usually played on a Saturday, will not conflict with an East Stroudsburg High School home game scheduled Sept. 29.

"We try to arrange our football schedule so that we are never playing at home at the same time as either Stroudsburg or East Stroudsburg High School," Eiler said. "We hope that fans of the high school teams will come to our games and visa-versa."

There will be one new opponent on ESSC's schedule, Cortland State, which the Warriors will play at Cortland, N.Y. Nov. 3. The teams haven't met since 1965 . . .

A lot of people are worried about the increase in speed of the Indianapolis-type cars. The United States Auto Club, the governing body of Indy-type racing, put some safety measures into effect after the carnage at Indianapolis this year.

In a copyrighted story Tuesday in the Allentown Morning Call, PAUL REINHARD, the paper's auto racing writer, claims that USAC will put restrictor plates on the Indy-type cars next year . . .

Chris expected to go 1st in new tennis loop draft

NEW YORK (UPI) — Chris Evert, who appears destined to become the new queen of the tennis courts, is expected to receive the honor of being the first player drafted on Friday when World Team Tennis holds its first player draft.

The Miami franchise won a special lottery held last week in

Kramer says ATP against new loop

NEW YORK (UPI) — Jack Kramer said Tuesday that the Association of Tennis Players believes the new World Team Tennis league would be detrimental and disruptive to tennis throughout the world.

"I have had worried calls from Europe. Some promoters are scared as hell about this team tennis plan," Kramer, executive director of the ATP, said from Los Angeles. "If it went through, it could destroy the world tournament circuit, and I have been asked if ATP is going along with those plans. I want to state we are not."

The majority of our players are on the side of tournament play under the International Lawn Tennis Federation. There may be some of our members who wish to jump to World Team Tennis, and we can't stop them, of course. But at least 75 to 80 per cent of our membership will remain on the tournament circuit."

Kramer believes the team concept is wrong, that it will destroy the tournament method which has, according to the former court great, "been doing so much good for the sport."

Mrs. King has expressed a personal preference to play for a West Coast team or for New York.

Erving comes home; slated to join Nets

UNIONDALE, N.Y. (UPI) — Julius Erving fulfills a lifelong dream today — to play basketball in his native New York—as the court-embattled super star forward officially moves from the Virginia Squires to the New York Nets of the American Basketball Association.

Erving, the all star 6-foot-6 forward, has been traded to New York for the Nets' leading scorer last season, forward George Carter, plus "considerable considerations."

Earl Foreman, owner of the Squires, confirmed the trade Tuesday and added that among the considerable considerations would be "a lot of cash."

The 23-year old Erving, a native of Roosevelt, N.Y., who once asked the Nets to sign him out of college while still an underclassman, is suing the Squires to get out of the remaining two years of his four-year contract.

Julius Erving

that suit, which will be settled here by an arbitrator, Henry Morganthau, later this year, the trade does not come as a major surprise.

Foreman so much as acknowledged that.

'One of the main results of this trade is to hopefully make Julius remain in the ABA as opposed to other alternatives," Foreman said by telephone.

Erving has already signed a contract with the Atlanta Hawks of the rival National Basketball Association. But his draft rights in that league are owned by the Milwaukee Bucks which clouds any move he would make immediately to "jump" leagues in the same fashion as ex-ABAers Rick Barry, John Brisker, Jim McDaniels and Connie Hawkins.

The Erving - to - New York trade climaxes a desire Erving expressed while he was a junior at the University of Massachusetts in 1970. At that time, he went to the Nets and asked them to sign him instead of waiting for his class to graduate. Lou Carneseca, Nets' general manager-coach at the time, rejected the idea on the premise that it would be unethical. The Squires went ahead and drafted Erving and signed him to the now-contested four year contract.

Oddly, it was a similar situation which brought Barry to the Nets from Virginia in 1970. Unhappy about playing in Virginia, Barry threatened to jump leagues and signed a contract with the NBA San Francisco Warriors. That prompted the Squires to trade him to the Nets. Two years later, however, a court ruled Barry had to report to San Francisco.

Carter, a 6-foot-7 forward, originally played for the Squires after a brief stint with the Detroit Pistons in the NBA. After one season, however, he was traded to the old Pittsburgh Condors for a No. 1 draft pick and then moved on to Carolina and later the Nets. He averaged 17 points per game for the Nets last year.

One which the two witnesses before the House Commerce subcommittee said they could live with was introduced by Rep. Torbert H. MacDonald, D-Mass., subcommittee chairman. It would affect only professional football, whose blackouts have caused the most controversy nationwide.

MacDonald's bill would bar blackouts of network-televised games if tickets to the stadium are sold out 48 hours before the road.

Each team will have six salaried players—three men and three women—and the bulk of the rosters will be filled at Friday's draft.

The order of selection in the first round will be Miami, Boston, San Diego, Phoenix, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Houston, Golden Gate (Oakland - San Francisco), Los Angeles, New York, Minnesota, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Chicago, Toronto and Denver.

Alverson said, "We are opposed to the anti-blackout legislation" if they apply to professional basketball. But he added, "We feel we can live with legislation which would lift blackouts" for football alone.

Pete Rozelle, commissioner of the National Football League, will present professional football's response to the proposed legislation in September after Congress returns from a month long summer vacation.

Bowie Kuhn, commissioner of baseball, is scheduled to testify at the hearing.

The proposed bills use as a vehicle a 1961 act of Congress exempting professional football teams from antitrust laws so they could enter into contracts with the television networks to cover the entire league.

Teen Forum*Moving troubles

By Jean Adams

MOVE: (Q.) My family moved to a new house two weeks ago. The house is not really "new," but it is new to us, and in a new neighborhood. I like it, but the kids around here don't like me.

They pick on me and I've got into two fights. I've tried everything, being nice to them, doing what they tell me to do and saying good things to them.

I don't know what else to do.

Unhappy Girl in Virginia

(A.) You can let time work for you.

Two weeks is not long enough for you to know the girls and boys in your neighborhood or for them to know you.

The world is like this. The newcomer is greeted with suspicion and has to "prove" herself or himself. I am not endorsing this condition; I am just explaining it to you.

Be yourself. Be friendly, but don't overdo it. Be honest. Be patient. As you become better known your qualities will be recognized and you will be accepted.

NO VISITORS: (Q.) I am 15 years old and my father won't let guys come to our house. If they come, he runs them off. My mother understands my problem, but she doesn't want to go against him. What would you do if you were me?

Desperate in New York

(A.) I would try to talk to my father about it. If he refused to listen I would try again in a few days or a few weeks. I would keep trying.

I would also continue to keep the problem before my mother.

In talking to both your father and your mother, you should stress these points:

(1.) You NEED friends, both boys and girls.

(2.) One part of friendship is to WELCOME friends in your home at times. This includes boys, even if you are not dating yet.

(3.) Both girls and boys who do not have a reasonably well-rounded social life as teenagers are likely to have trouble later adjusting to the social demands of adult life.

If your father could read my mail, he would see that forbidding boy-girl friendships at your age is quite dangerous. Many girls start seeing boys on the sneak — which is a very easy way to get into trouble.

I hope that you will keep your eyes open to such dangers and keep working for an understanding with your parents that will free you to have friends in your home.

counselor. My grandmother is too old. Please do not use my name. If my brother finds out I've written you he will kill me.

Scared in Pennsylvania

(A.) Your grandmother may not be as old as you think. Visit her and talk to her about your troubles — all of them. It is evident that a number of changes are needed at your place. Your grandmother may be able to talk to your mother or father and convince them that some changes should be made.

Parents who find it necessary to leave their younger children in authority of their older children should keep a close check on what goes on while they are gone.

Leaving older and younger children alone regularly is often unhealthy for all concerned.

Dodger data

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — In 1969 Ted Sizemore, then with the Dodgers became the seventh Dodger to be named National League Rookie of the Year since 1947. Other Dodger rookie winners were Jackie Robinson, Don Newcombe, Junior Gilliam, Joe Black, Frank Howard and Jim Lefebvre.

Good old days

NEW YORK (UPI) — On May 27, 1823, a match race was held between Eclipse and Henry at the old Union Course track, about a mile from the present Aqueduct. The New York Racing Association says attendance was reported at 60,000 people. New York City population at the time was 150,000.

Tempting tube

A 19-year-old authoress, Joyce Maynard (in her new book, "Looking Back") reflected that during her lifetime she had logged 5,000 hours in front of the television set.

This neither surprised nor impressed me. Sometimes I feel the action on that little tube is monitoring my heartbeat and that when Dick Van Dyke goes off for good, that will be the end of my life.

If there is anything that is shocking it is the way housewives have generally come to accept commercials that depict them in the home.

There was a time when we questioned large hairy arms coming out of our washers, men in white raincoats who descended from the air with leakproof sandwich bags, or Morey Amsterdam running around your stomach with a bucket of antacid and a mop.

Hair-raising school study

NEW YORK (UPI) — Students with high academic averages have substantially more zinc and copper in their hair than students with low grades, according to a study headed up by Prof. Adon Gordis of the University of Michigan. The high average students have a lower than normal iodine content "while the reverse is true of students at the opposite end of the grade-point scale," it also was found.

The study was financed first by the U. of M. Institute for Environmental Quality and then by a grant from the National Science Foundation's Research Applied to National Needs.

Early sight test

NEW YORK (UPI) — When a child reaches age three, it is time to check the way he or she sees because poor vision can retard the normal development of skills needed for the tasks ahead in school.

The American Optometric Association points out that a youngster who is not visually equipped for school may fall behind his classmates, may be taunted by them, eventually grow to hate school and may become a behavior problem or a school dropout.

Shock has turned to apathy and resignation. It is like the old Thurber cartoon of the man and his wife in bed with a seal balanced on the headboard and the man is saying "Okay, so there's a seal on the bed. So what!"

I've never pretended to be a stable person. That is why I lean heavily on the strength of others. A group of us was watching the tube intermittently the other day between an attempt at playing cards.

"Is that the silliest thing you've ever seen?" I giggled. "Imagine, a man walking through your wall and offering to clean them."

"It could happen," said Vera defensively.

"Whatya mean it could happen?"

"Well, maybe not through the wall, but I've seen some weirdos at my door before."

"Next time you know you'll begin to believe that a little biscuit hops out of the tube and changes into a little three-inch person who giggles when you punch him in the stomach."

"Well, just because you've never seen one doesn't mean it couldn't happen."

"What's the matter with all of you?" I asked, throwing down my cards. "I suppose you're going to defend the commercial where the man is piloting a boat through your toilet tank and telling you about a new bowl cleaner!"

No one said anything for a full minute. Then Marilyn asked, "How big is the boat?"

Vera interrupted, "Just because we can't see a Marina in there . . ."

If school doesn't start pretty soon, we'll all be in a home.

Ann Landers
Living together

Dear Ann Landers: When I first read the letter from the "liberated" girl who lived with her boyfriend for sixteen months (without benefit of clergy) I was angry. Now that I have simmered down, I feel it is just another pathetic case.

I did the same fool thing and then married the guy. I should have learned something in our living-together years, but I kept hoping he would change and assume some responsibility. I not only went to school, but held a job and kept house. He never lifted a hand in those days and he's not lifting a hand now. I've tried putting aside chores for him and sweating it out, but you can stand the smell of rotting food for just so long. I should have said, "Shape up or I'm leaving" — and left. But I didn't. Now if I leave, it's desertion.

A liberated relationship involves mutual respect and willingness to share responsibilities. So how liberated am I now? Although I am still unwilling to call it quits, it's an uphill fight all the way.

Battling Bertha

Dear Bertha: Thanks for the ringside report. And good luck. You sound as if you need a horseshoe in your glove, lady.

Dear Ann Landers: I recently read a letter from a woman who said her emotional state depended on the condition of her closets and dresser drawers. She said she couldn't think straight unless everything was in perfect order. Of course, when her husband or children moved something from its proper place she had to put it back where it belonged. Naturally, she spent half her life picking up after people and complaining about it.

Your Boston Reader Joe

Dear Joe: Glad you wrote. The mail is running two to one against me. The nays are coming from the small towns and the yeas from the larger cities — which tells a lot right off.

A woman in this office has the same problem. She says she can't do a lick of work until her surroundings are in apple-pie order. With so many people using the same equipment it is virtually impossible. She drives everybody crazy rearranging things, wiping fingermarks of the file cabinets, dusting furniture and "disinfecting" the mouthpieces of telephones.

Even if drinking is the "in" thing in your crowd, it needn't crowd you out. Learn the facts from Ann Landers' booklet, "Booze And You — For Teen-Agers Only." Send 35 cents in coin and a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to this newspaper with your request.

Nothing goes with that first cup of coffee like the morning paper. A good time to catch up on the latest news, sports and entertainment. Start your subscription today and wake up with the news tomorrow.

Jack O'Brian's*Voice of Broadway

NEW YORK — There was a gal named Texas Guinan who made a name for herself by running a "speak" during Prohibition and insulting anyone who poked a whiskey-seeking nose on the premises. Rodney Dangerfield might be called the latter day male version of Texas, except he wouldn't hurt your feelings, just his own... Dropping into his club is apt to go something like this.

"There's a guy from Oregon," points out Rodney, "who says I have a nervous tic. I fix my tie a lot. And everytime I do the 'Tonight' show I can expect a letter from him in the mail the following week, with the count of how many times I've straightened my tie. I think his last count was 43. What can I say? I also wipe my brow a lot on television. Sometimes my handkerchief comes out so often I think I'm doing a magic act. Nobody's noticed that yet. But I sometimes wonder where people's heads are at, why they notice things like that."

"I have another fan who always sends me socks. Over the past three years he's sent me over 100 pairs of long socks. I seldom wear long socks. They're not comfortable. In fact, the only time I wear long socks is when I do a panel TV show, when I know I'll sit down and cross my legs, and you're not supposed to let your skin show. Other than that I wear short socks. I'm explaining this for two reasons. Firstly, to show my lack of concern with clothes, and secondly, maybe someone would be interested in buying 100 pairs of socks, and I can make a deal."

"I also get letters from people who want to know if I have my shirts custom made. I don't. They want to know how I get my collars to look the way they do. It's simple. I buy my shirts a size too large. It's more comfortable."

"I first became concerned with clothes when I did the Ed Sullivan show. It was my first time on television and I had the problem of what to wear. I decided on a black suit, a blue shirt and a red tie. After my first appearance, Mr. Sullivan signed me to do four more. As I prepared for the second show, I thought of what I should wear, and I realized it wasn't a problem I wanted to concern myself with, so I decided to wear the same thing."

"From then on, I've always worn the same uniform whenever I do a television show. I now own three of the same black suit, a half dozen of the same blue shirt and my one red tie. (In case anyone of you are planning to write to me to ask where I got my tie, let me tell you now — I buy them anywhere, and the cheaper they are, the better they fit me.) I now never have to think about what to wear and I'm always ready to go on and perform."

"And that's what it's all about for me, writing jokes and telling them. I started writing jokes at the age of 15. When I think about it now, I guess I started because comedy is a camouflage for depression, and I didn't have the best childhood. And my favorite people are people with a sense of humor. I don't care how they're dressed or how they wear their hair. In fact, when I look at someone, I can't even tell if they're dressed expensively or not, or whether they have the latest hairdo or not. It's something I don't know about."

"But I think I do know about humor and that's why I'm working on a new television pilot. I'm going to call it Dangerfield's, like my Manhattan nightclub, and I'm going to play myself, a guy who owns a nightclub. That's something else I know about since I'll be celebrating the fourth anniversary of my nightclub in September. The main characters in the series will be based on the people that work in my club, like the cook and the hat check girl and the bartender. Let me tell you, they're characters all right, and in four years "And if you're ever in New York I hope you'll come in to see me work and meet some of the characters that work in my club, then you'll know what makes me tick. Why I've got amateur d', he looks right at two people and says 'How many are you?' And my doorman, he's the one who's making the most money at the club. Just last week he made $1,500. He sold two cars.

that's fit to print?

BERKELEY, Calif. (UPI) — Street kids shelling out $25 for 100 gelatin squares sold as "LSD Windowpane" are not getting an active drug at all.

"THC Goldenrod," a pale orange tablet selling for $50 per 100, is really PCP, a tranquilizer used primarily for monkeys.

That's the word from "The Friday Paper Drug News," a weekly news sheet obtainable in the San Francisco Bay Area every Friday afternoon.

Prepared by Joann Lee, a mile-a-minute talker and drug coordinator for the Berkeley Free Clinic, the paper keeps "users" abreast of what is really in the "stuff" they are buying.

"People are going to use mind-altering drugs," she says matter-of-factly. "I feel a certain responsibility to help them to know what they're getting and to know the risks they're taking."

The paper's system works like this:

A user comes to the clinic, located in the basement of a church near the University of California campus, picks up an information sheet marked with a five-digit number, and leaves.

In privacy, he encloses a sample of the drug he questions and sends it to Pharm Chem Laboratory in Palo Alto.

The laboratory analyzes the sample and sends its findings to the Free Clinic where they are printed in the Friday paper.

Is that legal?

"All we handle is information," said Ms. Lee. The laboratory is licensed to analyze mind altering drugs and the user takes no greater risk than before, she said. He doesn't sign his name and the Friday paper prints his sheet number to help identify his specimen.

"In terms of providing accurate information for people ... it is brilliant. We print 1,000 a week."

She estimated that there are "something like 200" programs in the United States of this sort. "The University of Oregon at Eugene has an off-campus program and so does the University of Florida" at Gainesville.

The Los Angeles Free Press runs a weekly "Dope Scoreboard" which discusses at length various drugs being "eaten, snorted and smoked."

Miss Lee said her Friday paper has been well received.

"People who are doing psychedelics don't want to run the risk of dying. If they know what they're dealing with, they can take the proper precautions," she said.

For instance a recent edition advised, "PCP is a B-A-A-A-D drug to mess with — mixes with alcohol to produce comas, maybe death ... nasty trip, etc."

And, "Smack freaks — watch out for the light brown powder (selling for $50 a gram in San Francisco) — this is second week in a row with superpotent smack. This 79 per cent stuff is about 26 times stronger than usual."

In Santa Cruz, the paper noted a dark brown soft fibrous solid sold as "Kashmir hash" for $1.00 a pound is really 2.4 per cent THC.

"Hash usually runs about 15-20 per cent THC," said the news. "This is a burn."

Birthday bouquet to an old reporter

Editor's Note: It takes a good reporter to know one. H.D. "Doc" Quigg has not yet matched James L. Kilgallen's 70 years of chasing fire engines and covering wars. But he has shared a lot of them, including the wars.

By H. D. QUIGG

UPI Senior Editor

NEW YORK (UPI) — I know a wonderful man. His name is James L. Kilgallen, and he has just turned 85 years of age. For 70 of those years he has been a newspaperman. He still is.

He has had the same bride, Mae, for 61 years. All the days of his life, he has been a nut about baseball. The Yankees on his 80th birthday gave him a lifetime pass, which he treasures.

He writes about things other than sports, normally. But of his work he says: "When I write now, I'm not throwing a fast ball anymore. I'm throwing the old bloop ball they pitched in the major leagues a few years ago."

That is frivolous talk. James L. Kilgallen never threw a bloop in his life. And he is still as enthusiastic about being a reporter as he was when he first started in Chicago and was called in the middle of the night to go cover a prison massacre in Herrin, Ill.

He threw on clothing, went, worked, and two days later

Economy down

PRINCETON, N.J. (UPI) — Two Princeton University economists have linked suicide rates to fluctuations in the economy. Daniel S. Hamermesh, assistant professor of economics, together with Neal M. Soss, a Ph. D. candidate, have demonstrated that the suicide rate in some 21 industrialized countries is affected by economic recession as well as by unemployment, income and age.

happened to look down and discover he was wearing one black and one tan shoe.

One day in 1920, the morning service of United Press for which Jim was working, signed up the young Babe Ruth, who was starting to whiz (he hit 54 homers that year), to write a story each time he hit a home run. Jim forgot about this but was reminded by Ruth himself one day when the Babe hit one in Chicago.

Some time after the game ended, the phone rang.

"Hello, bureau manager?" said a gruff and booming voice.

"Yeah," said Jim.

"Low one, inside," said Ruth.

"Goodby!"

Jim sat down and wrote 500 words. By Babe Ruth.

Kilgallen himself is a hard man to get down on paper. Practically impossible, in ordinary words. He is a fine and feisty little guy who has covered every story in the world—or all continents but the Antarctic—for seven decades. He calls ladies "madam." He never asks a bartender for a highball or a cocktail. A drink to him is an "El Belto."

Once during the Dr. Sander mercy killing trial in Manchester, N.H., in 1950 a local lady flounced up to him and said: "Oh, sir, I'm so thrilled to see you. But I've always wondered, how is your name pronounced?"

"Kill gallon, madam, as in liquor," Jim replied.

Once in the early 1930s during Kilgallen's years-long career as roving reporter for the old International News Service, the utilities magnate Samuel Insull fled the country by ship after getting in a jam because

Inland codfish

One codfish, the burbot, lives in the inland waters of North America. In Nebraska it has been reported from the Missouri, Platte and Niobrara rivers.

thousands of investors had lost money in his company network.

Jim was ordered to the Mediterranean to find him—regardless of expense. He even chartered an airplane, just for himself—an almost daring profligacy in those days. He finally caught up with Insull in Istanbul. The magnate was extradited.

On the ship on the way back, Insull looked over Kilgallen's shoulder on deck one day when Jim was making out his expense account and exclaimed: "And they indicted me!"

Jim was sitting practically next to Ruth Snyder of the Snyder-Gray tragedy in the 1920s when she moaned: "Jesus, forgive me for I have sinned." Then the executioner adjusted the black mask and pulled the switch.

During the Hauptmann trial, Jim got an exclusive interview with the man accused of the Lindbergh kidnaping of the early 1930s.

"The chances are, Bruno," Jim told him. "That you will sit on the hot seat."

"If I do," replied Hauptmann, "I'll die like a man."

He did. "Outside of a little tic in the left eye, he displayed no emotion," Jim recalls.

Kilgallen, who now writes for the Hearst Headline Service, regards the whole Lindbergh-Hauptmann affair as the most interesting story of his career. During the trial, Damon Runyon wrote that Jim was "an editor's dream of a reporter."

"When Runyon and I were in for the execution," he says, "they took away my watch and two miniature bottles of rye from my pocket. Mt. Vernon—it's funny how you remember. Afterward, as I was writing, the man came over and put the two bottles beside me, and I had a nice El Belto."

"I regard this business as one of the most interesting there is," Kilgallen said in an 85th birthday interview. "The variety, if you get the prize job. Meeting people like Peggy Hopkins Joyce (quite a number!), the Duchess of Windsor, Tokyo Rose, Al Capone. What variety does a dentist have?

"But you go ahead and write anything you want, Doc."

Sure. The truth is good enough.

Small businessman's problem — son doesn't want it

By FREDERICK C. KLEIN
Dow Jones-Ottaway News

DEADWOOD, S.D. — Bert and Ruth Jacobs are nearing retirement, and they look back on their joint business career with a good deal of pride. In 1934, following the death of Bert's father, they took over the men's wear store he had operated for 32 years in this small Black Hills mining community; the year before, sales at the once-flourishing establishment had shrunk to just 12,000 dollars and debt had mounted dangerously.

Today, the Jacobs own six clothing stores in Deadwood and three nearby South Dakota towns. Sales this year should total 1.5 million dollars, the operation is debt-free and the couple's annual income exceeds 100,000 dollars. The walls of their handsome, hilltop home here are lined with plaques and certificates attesting to their years of leadership in community activities.

"The business has been a source of tremendous satisfaction to us both," says Bert, a trim, energetic man of 70 who, like his 66-year-old wife, looks about a dozen years younger than his age. "It might sound funny to say it, but the challenge of building something was always more important to us than the money. We wanted to be able to say we'd contributed something."

But there is a very large fly in the Jacobs' ointment. The couple long had hoped (indeed, expected) that one or the other of their two sons would assume control of the business once they were ready to step aside, but this is not to be. The sons — Sheldon, age 42, and Doran, 39 — live in New York, have families and careers of their own and have no wish to return to Deadwood except to visit.

Doran, the heir-apparent, made up his mind about a year ago.

Understand decision

Thus, the Jacobs are reluctantly investigating ways of selling out. "We understand the boys' decision, but it's still a big disappointment to us," says Ruth, who has been in charge of the financial part of the business while Bert handles the marketing end.

"We hate the thought of turning the stores over to strangers after they've been in our family all these years."

The Jacobs' plight is a common one in American business. Despite the explosive growth of large, publicly held companies over the past several decades, the family-run business — be it a proprietorship or a closely held corporation — remains the numerically dominant form of enterprise in this country. Except for failure, the main reason that such concerns change hands or cease to exist is the unwillingness of younger family members to follow in the footsteps of their parents, experts say.

No one keeps track of how many offspring do or don't go into the family business, but it is believed that the proportion of those who don't, has been climbing of late. This is generally attributed to the weakening of family ties in the rush of modern life and to the increasing availability of higher education, which has opened more career avenues to the children of small businessmen and tradesmen.

Moreover, some observers suggest that the trend is not to be lamented: father-son business combinations often don't work out well once they are undertaken, it's asserted.

Family businesses difficult

"Family businesses are probably the most difficult to operate. They have all the problems that other businesses have, plus the psychological strains that often exist between father and son," says Harry Levinson, a former Harvard Business School professor who heads the Levinson Institute, a Cambridge, Mass., concern that does consulting work and conducts management seminars.

"Usually, the father is to blame when things go wrong," Levinson goes on. "He might say that he's built the business to pass it on to his kids, but he really sees it as a monument to himself and he doesn't want to let it go.

Unless a father and son have an unusually mature relationship, the son is better off elsewhere. He's in a situation where he finds it hard to win. Even if he makes the business better than it was when his father ran it, a lot of people will say 'what do you expect? Look what he had to start with.'

Bert was on the road, selling shirts for Van Heusen, and doing very, very well," says Ruth. "We were living in Milwaukee, and we liked it fine. Bert's dad kept asking us to come back, but we resisted. Finally, he took sick and we couldn't say no anymore."

Deadwood "dead wood" in '34

The couple's return to Deadwood was less than cheering, Ruth continues. "We're very up-to-date here now, of course, but things were pretty primitive then," she says. "The only house we could find had bare floors, gas room-heaters and no closets. I'm a big-city girl (she was born in New York), and I wasn't used to that, but we stuck it out."

The Jacobs turned the Deadwood store into the black after a year or so. Then, little by little, they branched out. Between 1938 and 1968, they acquired five more stores that either had gone bankrupt or weren't paying off for their owners. All are solidly profitable now.

Besides the original men's shop in Deadwood, named The Hub, they own Hub Men's Stores in Belle Fourche and Sturgis, Westernwear Stores in Rapid City and Belle Fourche and a woman's shop, the New York Store, in Deadwood, next door to The Hub. "Nicest ladies' clothing in the Black Hills," brags Bert of the latter establishment. Bert says his formula for success has been fairly simple. "First off, I always paid my store managers a percentage of their store's profit instead of a salary. There's nothing like the profit motive to get the best out of people. All our clerks are paid a percentage of their store's gross sales. That ensures complete harmony on the sales floor. There's no fighting over customers or that sort of thing."

Then there's the matter of knowing local people and their tastes. "I've always been active in the community, and I encourage my managers to do the same," he says. "Contacts go a long way in small towns, and they help us know what our customers want."
